

Introduction : Before You Begin

Who We Are :

- Ashwini - Software Developer at a MAANG company, LinkedIn creator, and career coach. Built a LinkedIn following of 50,000+ from scratch by applying everything taught in this course.
- Ronak - Building : ownURgrowth , manages the business, operations, and strategy behind Ashwini's LinkedIn presence and many other creators. Has worked hands-on with brand collaborations, content strategy, and audience growth.

This course is not theory from a textbook - everything here is tried, tested, and proven on a real LinkedIn account.

What This Course Is (And What It Isn't)

What it IS:

- A short, crisp, no-fluff crash course
- Pure tactics and learnings - only what actually works
- Tried and tested strategies from a real creator who has done it

What it is NOT:

- A long, boring, padded-out course
- Generic LinkedIn advice you've already heard
- Theory with no practical application

The biggest mistake most people make with online courses is consuming without implementing. This course is designed to be short enough that you have no excuse not to finish it and detailed enough that you can act on it immediately.

How to Use This Guide

- These notes are designed to be a complete standalone guide - even if you haven't watched the video, reading this cover to cover will give you 100% of the knowledge.
- Use the Index - The guide is divided into clear sections. Jump directly to what's most relevant to you right now.

- While watching the video - Note down one liner notes of whatever resonates. Your own handwritten notes will reinforce learning.
- Come back to this PDF - Bookmark it. Every time you sit down to create LinkedIn content or work on your profile, treat this as your reference manual.

Additional Insight: Research shows that people retain only 10% of what they read passively but up to 70% when they take notes and apply concepts immediately. That's exactly why this course pairs a video with detailed written notes, use both.

The Promise : If you read these notes thoroughly and apply what's inside, you will see real, measurable growth on LinkedIn. No fluff. No filler. Just results.

Why LinkedIn & Why Now?

The Opportunity Most People Will Miss ! Every few years, a platform emerges that gives ordinary people an extraordinary opportunity to build visibility and credibility through content alone. YouTube in 2016. TikTok in 2020. The people who recognised those windows early built audiences and careers that most people now look at from the outside and wish they had been a part of LinkedIn is that window right now. Organic reach is still high, consistent creators still stand out, and the algorithm actively rewards people who show up regularly. Three years from now, the people who started today will be the ones others wish they had followed earlier. The question is not whether LinkedIn is worth your time, it is whether you can afford to wait any longer.

It Does Not Matter Where You Are Starting From !

LinkedIn levels the playing field in a way very few platforms do. Your college tier, your city, and your starting follower count are all irrelevant. What matters is whether you show up consistently and share value. Everyone gets the same algorithm, the same reach potential, and the same access to recruiters, decision-makers, and industry leaders.

Visibility Beats Everything !

Consider two students. Same college. Same city. Both build equally impressive projects. The only difference is LinkedIn presence.

	Student A	Student B
LinkedIn Activity	Actively posts and builds industry connections	Not active on LinkedIn
Project Visibility	Reaches hundreds of professionals including recruiters	Reaches only college professors and friends
Outcome	Gets messages, appreciation, and lands an internship	Gets congratulated and asked for a party

Same talent. Same project. Same effort. Completely different outcomes because of visibility alone. This is what a personal brand does. It takes the work you are already doing and puts it in front of people who can change your life.

Additional Insight: Recruiters today do not wait for resumes. They actively search LinkedIn for candidates. An active, well-optimised profile means opportunities come to you rather than you chasing them.

What LinkedIn Can Do For You ?

- Students - Build a visible body of work before graduation. Land internships, referrals, and recruiter outreach while your peers are not even thinking about it yet.
- Working Professionals - Accelerate promotions, attract inbound job opportunities, and build industry credibility that compounds over time.
- Business Owners and Freelancers - Generate high quality leads and sales organically, without a paid ads budget, from an audience that is already in a professional and business mindset.

The Effort Reality :

LinkedIn requires far less effort than people assume. A well-written post takes 15 to 20 minutes. No video editing, no production setup, no design required. A single post can reach thousands of the right people - recruiters, founders, clients, and industry peers without spending a single rupee. The effort-to-impact ratio on LinkedIn is higher than any other professional platform today.

Section Action Checklist :

1. Write down in one line what you personally want from LinkedIn - a job, internship, clients, or credibility. This is your north star for the entire course.
2. Find one person in your field who has built a strong LinkedIn presence. Spend 10 minutes studying their profile and content. This is what is possible for you.
3. If you do not have a LinkedIn account yet, create one before moving to the next section.

Building a Profile That Works For You !

Your Profile is Your Storefront.

Before anyone reads a single post you write, before anyone decides to connect with you or respond to your message, they see your profile. Think of it exactly like a storefront. A well-designed, clear storefront pulls people in. A neglected or confusing one makes people walk past without a second thought. One simple rule governs everything about your LinkedIn profile: what is seen is what gets noticed, and what gets noticed is what gets results. Every element of your profile is either working for you or working against you. There is no neutral ground.

The Two Elements People See Before Opening Your Profile !

When you send a connection request or a message to someone, they see exactly two things before they even click on your name, your profile photo and your headline. These two elements alone determine whether people engage with you or ignore you. Getting them right is non-negotiable.

Profile Photo - The First Impression You Cannot Take Back.

Your profile photo does not need to be a studio shoot. It needs to look professional and approachable. Here is a simple framework to get it right:

What To Do	What To Avoid
Use a clear, well-lit photo	Dark, blurry, or low quality images
Frame from waist to head	Full body shots where your face is too small
Keep it professional or smart casual	Party photos, group photos, or heavily filtered images

Plain or simple background	Cluttered or distracting backgrounds
----------------------------	--------------------------------------

If you do not have a professional photo, a clean, well-lit casual photo is perfectly fine. The priority is clarity and approachability. People should be able to see your face clearly and feel comfortable reaching out to you.

Headline - Your One Line Pitch

Your headline is the single most important line on your profile. It follows your name everywhere on LinkedIn - in search results, connection requests, comments, and messages. Most people waste it by writing their job title alone. That is a missed opportunity. A strong headline follows this structure:

What you do + Who you help + What outcome you deliver

Additional Insight: Think of your headline as a billboard that has one second to make an impression. It should immediately tell a stranger who you are, who you serve, and why they should care. Vague headlines like "Student at XYZ University" or "Looking for Opportunities" tell people nothing and convert nobody.

The About Section - Your Story, Not Your Resume

The About section is where most people either copy-paste their resume or leave it blank. Both are wrong. This section is your opportunity to tell your story in your own voice - where you come from, what you care about, what you are building, and how you can help the person reading it. Write it like you are talking to someone, not filing a form. It should feel human, not corporate.

Pro Tip: Writing a compelling About section from scratch can feel overwhelming. In the resources section of this course, a ready-to-use AI prompt has been provided. Paste your details into that prompt, run it through any AI tool, and you will have a strong About section draft within minutes. Refine it to match your voice and you are done.

Experience and Skills - Show Impact, Not Just Activity

These sections cannot be auto-generated and require your personal input. However, how you fill them makes a significant difference.

If you are a student: Add everything. Every project, internship, freelance work, college club role, competition, or volunteer experience counts. At this stage, showing initiative and range matters more than having a polished corporate track record.

If you are a working professional: Do not just list responsibilities. Anyone can write "managed a team" or "worked on product launches." What sets you apart is showing the impact you created. Numbers, outcomes, and results are what make experience sections memorable.

Weak Entry	Strong Entry
Managed social media accounts	Grew LinkedIn page from 2K to 45K followers in 18 months through organic content strategy
Worked on backend development	Reduced API response time by 40% through query optimisation, improving user experience for 10K+ daily active users

For both your profile photo and cover image, Canva is all you need. Do not overthink the design. Keep it clean and simple.

Your cover image has one job - to reinforce what you do or what you want people to know about you at a glance. If you are a developer, it could reference your tech stack or a project. If you are a coach or creator, it could state what you help people with. One clear message is enough.

Section Action Checklist

1. Update your profile photo - clear, well-lit, face visible, waist to head framing.
2. Rewrite your headline - what you do, who you help, what outcome you deliver.
3. Write your About section using the AI prompt in the resources section.
4. Update your Experience section - students add everything, professionals show impact not just responsibilities.
5. Design your cover image on Canva - one clear message, keep it simple.

Network is the Real Net Worth !

Why Networking Changes Everything ?

There is a reason the phrase "network is the real net worth" has become a universal truth in the professional world. The opportunities that change your life rarely come from job portals or cold applications. They come from people - someone who remembers your name, someone who saw your post, someone you helped six months ago who now knows exactly who to call.

LinkedIn accelerates this process faster than any other platform. It removes the barriers that would otherwise make certain people completely inaccessible to you. The CEO of a company you admire, a co-founder building something in your space, a CFO who has walked the exact path you want to walk on LinkedIn, one thoughtful message is all that stands between you and a real conversation with any of them. That access simply does not exist anywhere else.

What Genuine Networking Actually Looks Like?

Networking is not collecting connections like trophies. It is building real, two-way relationships where value flows in both directions. The mindset shift that makes all the difference is this - lead with giving, not asking.

Comment genuinely on people's posts. Share something useful. Celebrate someone's win publicly. Help without expecting anything in return. These small actions compound over time into a reputation, and that reputation becomes the reason people think of you when opportunities arise.

Additional Insight: The most powerful professional relationships are built slowly and naturally, not through a single cold message asking for a favour. Engage with someone's content consistently for a few weeks before reaching out directly. By the time you do, you are not a stranger - you are already a familiar face.

The Numbers Game Framework.

Networking on LinkedIn is a numbers game, and the math is brutally honest. The average response rate on cold outreach is less than 5%. Reaching out to 2 or 3 people and hearing nothing back is completely normal - it is not a reflection of you, it is just the reality of cold outreach. To get 1 meaningful reply, reach out to at least 15 to 20 people. To get 4 to 5 real conversations going, you need to be reaching out to 100 or more people consistently. Before you question the process, increase your effort.

Pro Tip: Personalise every connection request with a short note. Two sentences explaining who you are and why you want to connect is enough to dramatically increase your acceptance rate over blank requests.

What Becomes Possible When You Build in Public !

When you are active and visible on LinkedIn, inbound opportunities start replacing outbound effort over time. Companies reach out to you even when you are not looking. Collaborations find you. People refer you for opportunities without you even asking. This is not luck, it is the compounding result of showing up consistently and building genuine relationships over time.

The earlier you start, the more powerful this compounding becomes.

Section Action Checklist

1. Send connection requests to at least 15 relevant people today - seniors, peers, or professionals in your target industry.
2. Write a short personalised note with every request. Two sentences is enough.
3. Engage genuinely on at least 15 people's posts today - a thoughtful comment goes further than a like.

4. Identify 5 people you genuinely admire in your field and start engaging with their content before reaching out directly.

Building and Managing Connections the Right Way !

The Harsh Truth About Everyone's Inbox.

Every active LinkedIn user gets flooded with connection requests and messages daily. Recruiters, founders, senior professionals, none of them have the time to read every DM or accept every request. This is not pessimism, it is reality. And it means that if your message looks like every other message in their inbox, it will be ignored like every other message in their inbox. The only way to cut through is to stand out. And the only way to stand out is through personalisation.

What Not To Do - The Messages That Never Work

These are the two most common messages sent on LinkedIn every single day, and they almost never get a response:

"I saw the JD, can you refer me?"

"I am open to work, does your company have any vacancy?"

These messages fail for a simple reason, they are entirely about what you want, with zero consideration for the person receiving them. There is no context, no connection, and no reason for the other person to take time out of their day to help a complete stranger. Sending these messages is not just ineffective, it actively creates a poor first impression that is very hard to recover from.

The Personalisation Framework :

Every message you send should make the recipient feel like it was written specifically for them, because it should be. Before reaching out to anyone, spend five minutes on their profile. Read their posts. Understand what they care about. Find a genuine point of connection.

A personalised message does not need to be long. It needs to show that you have done your homework and that you see them as a person, not just a means to an end.

Structure every outreach message around three things:

Observation - Something specific you noticed about their work, their post, or their journey.

Connection - Why it resonated with you or how it relates to your own path.

Ask - A clear, reasonable, and specific request. Not "can you help me" but exactly what kind of help you are looking for.

Pro Tip: If writing personalised messages feels difficult, use an AI tool to help you draft them. The resources section of this course includes ready-to-use prompts specifically built for LinkedIn outreach. Paste the person's profile details into the prompt and use the output as a starting draft, then refine it in your own voice before sending.

The HR Story - How Strategic Outreach Actually Works ?

This is a real example of what separates people who get results from people who give up. There was a company worth applying to, and the HR's LinkedIn profile was available. A message was sent a normal, standard message. No response. Most people would stop there.

Instead of stopping, the HR's profile was studied properly. It turned out she had written a book. Her interests and perspective were researched using an AI tool to get a quick but informed understanding of her work. A second message was sent not asking for a referral, but asking a genuine, thoughtful question about her book and her perspective on the subject.

She replied.

A real conversation followed. Trust and rapport were built naturally over that exchange. Only after a genuine connection had been established was the referral request made. The result was an interview call.

The lesson is not complicated. People help people they like and trust. Relationship always comes before the ask. If you lead with what you want, you will almost always be ignored. If you lead with genuine interest in the other person, doors open.

When Placements Are Around the Corner - Be Shameless About It !

When time is running out and you genuinely need referrals or responses, normal rules of hesitation do not apply. Here is what to do:

If you have the budget, invest in LinkedIn Premium for a month or two. It allows you to directly message people you are not connected with, which dramatically expands your reach during a critical window.

If budget is a constraint, use comments. Find the posts of the people you want to reach, and leave genuine, thoughtful, professional comments consistently. This puts your name in front of them repeatedly without requiring them to open a DM. Over time, you become a familiar face, and your eventual message lands very differently than a cold outreach from a stranger.

When placements are on the line, stop worrying about what people think of you for following up or reaching out multiple times. Your job is to get results. Be strategic, be persistent, and keep going.

Additional Insight: Following up is not desperation - it is professionalism. Most positive responses on LinkedIn come after the second or third touchpoint, not the first. A short, polite follow-up message three to five days after your initial outreach can double your response rate.

Section Action Checklist

1. Go through your pending or recent outreach messages and identify which ones were generic. Rewrite at least one using the Observation, Connection, Ask framework.
2. Pick one person you really want to connect with. Spend five minutes on their profile, find something genuine to reference, and send a personalised message today.
3. If placements or a job search is active right now, start commenting genuinely on posts from people at your target companies every day this week.

Use the outreach prompts in the resources section to draft your next three personalised messages.

Growing and Deepening Your Connections !

Your Purpose Was Fulfilled - Now What?

Most people treat LinkedIn connections transactionally. They reach out, get what they need, and move on. And while there is nothing wrong with having a clear purpose behind an outreach, leaving the relationship there is one of the biggest missed opportunities on the platform. The people who build truly powerful networks are the ones who see every new connection not as a transaction completed, but as a relationship started. One conversation, handled well, can turn into a mentor, a collaborator, a referral source, or a genuine friend. But only if you choose to nurture it beyond the initial ask.

The Three Levels of Engagement

Once you are connected with someone, there are three ways you can choose to engage with them. Each level produces a different quality of relationship.

Level 1 - Passive Engagement

This is where most people live. You open LinkedIn when you have time, occasionally reply to messages, sometimes comment on a post, and mostly show up only when you need something. You are somewhat visible to this person but not memorable. Think of this as the starting phase, the relationship exists but has not really begun yet.

This level keeps the door open but does not move you forward.

Level 2 - Active Engagement

This is where real relationships are built. Active engagement means you are consistently and intentionally adding value to the other person's professional life.

What this looks like in practice:

Sharing their posts within your network when the content is genuinely good.
Reposting their work with a thoughtful comment that adds to the conversation.
Regularly leaving meaningful comments on their posts, not just "great post" but something that shows you actually read and thought about what they shared.
Sending them articles, opportunities, or content that is relevant to their interests or work, with no agenda attached.

The key word here is value. Every interaction at this level should make the other person's professional life slightly better. That consistency is what builds trust and moves you from a name in their inbox to someone they actually think about.

Additional Insight: People remember how you made them feel, not what you said. Consistently showing up for someone without asking for anything in return is the single fastest way to build genuine professional goodwill. When you eventually need something, you will not feel like a stranger asking for a favour you will feel like a trusted contact making a reasonable request.

Level 3 - Deep Engagement

Deep engagement is friendship, plain and simple. This is the stage where professional boundaries fade and you are having real conversations about life, work, experiences, challenges, and wins with no agenda behind any of it. You are not showing up to add value strategically. You are showing up because you genuinely enjoy talking to this person and care about how they are doing.

This level cannot be rushed or manufactured. It develops naturally from consistent active engagement over time. But when it happens, these become the relationships that truly change the trajectory of your career and life.

Pro Tip: Do not try to force a connection from Level 1 to Level 3 overnight. Respect the natural pace of how relationships develop. Focus on being genuinely useful and present at Level 2, and let the deeper connections emerge on their own.

A Note on Socialising Skills

Not everyone finds it easy to keep conversations going or build rapport naturally. That is completely fine. If starting or sustaining professional conversations feels uncomfortable, use AI to help you. Paste the context of your conversation into an AI tool and ask for suggestions on how to respond or what to say next. It is a skill that develops with practice, and there is no shame in having a little support while you are building it.

Templates and conversation starters for every stage of engagement are included in the resources section of this course. Use them as a starting point, but always personalise them before sending.

Section Action Checklist

1. Look at your existing connections and identify three people you want to move from passive to active engagement. Start engaging with their content this week.
2. Send one message to a connection with something genuinely useful an article, an opportunity, or a resource with no ask attached.
3. Identify one connection that has moved to active engagement naturally. Make an effort to have a real, non-transactional conversation with them this week.

The Power of Commenting !

The Secret Every Creator Hides :

Here is something most people on LinkedIn do not realise. Creators may not check every DM. They may miss connection requests. But they almost always check their comments. Their public image and reputation matter deeply to them, and comments are where they see exactly what people think about their content and their ideas.

This one insight, used consistently, is one of the fastest ways to get noticed by people you would otherwise never be able to reach.

Why Commenting Works So Well ?

Leaving a meaningful comment on someone's post does two things simultaneously. First, it puts you directly in front of the creator. A thoughtful, well-articulated comment stands out immediately in a sea of "great post" and fire emojis. Creators notice people who genuinely engage with their ideas, and over time, a consistent commenter becomes a familiar and respected name.

Second, it drives traffic to your profile. Comment sections are public, and people read them. When you leave a comment that adds genuine value to the conversation, other readers get curious about who you are. They click on your name, visit your profile, and if your profile is solid, they connect with you. A single strong comment on a high-visibility post can bring dozens of profile visits without you doing anything else.

Additional Insight: Commenting is the most underrated growth strategy on LinkedIn. A post you spend 30 minutes writing might reach a few hundred people when you are starting out. A single sharp comment on a post with high engagement can put your name in front of thousands of the right people within hours.

What a Good Comment Looks Like ?

Not all comments are equal. A comment that drives results is one that adds something to the conversation - a new perspective, a personal experience, a follow-up question, or a piece of context that makes the original post even more valuable for other readers.

What to avoid: one word reactions, empty validation like "so true" or "loved this", and anything that sounds like you are only commenting to be seen.

What works: sharing a relevant personal experience, respectfully adding a point the creator did not cover, asking a specific and thoughtful question, or sharing how the post changed or confirmed your thinking on something.

Section Action Checklist

1. Identify five creators or professionals in your space whose content you genuinely find valuable. Follow them and turn on post notifications.
2. Leave one meaningful, substantive comment on a high-engagement post every single day this week.
3. Track your profile visits before and after a week of consistent commenting. The difference will speak for itself.

The Content Playbook !

LinkedIn Content is Different - Respect That

LinkedIn is not Instagram. You cannot post random, low-effort content and expect results. The audience here is professional, the standards are higher, and the content that wins is content that teaches, tells a story, or starts a conversation. Keep that as your north star for everything you post.

The Content Formats That Work

- Posts - A standard LinkedIn post is written text, with an optional image. The image does not need to be perfectly designed or directly related to the topic - a personal photo works just fine. The writing is what matters. This is the lowest-effort format and still one of the highest-performing ones when done well.

- Carousels - Carousels on LinkedIn work similarly to Instagram - multiple slides that the reader swipes through. The difference is that LinkedIn carousels need to deliver real value. Data, frameworks, storytelling, step-by-step breakdowns, educational content, these are what make a carousel worth swiping through. They take more time to create than a post, but significantly less time than a reel, and a well-designed, meaningful carousel consistently generates strong reach and impressions.
- Videos - Videos perform well on LinkedIn but require scripting, shooting, and editing. If you have the bandwidth, they are worth exploring. If not, posts and carousels alone are more than enough to build a strong presence.

Additional Insight: Do not let format become a barrier to starting. A well-written post with a personal photo will always outperform a beautifully designed carousel with nothing meaningful to say. Lead with substance.

The 6 Content Types That Work on LinkedIn

These six content types work regardless of whether you are a student, a working professional, or a business owner. When starting out, do not restrict yourself to one. Try all of them, see what resonates with your audience and what you enjoy creating, and then double down on what works.

1. Personal Stories and Lessons Learned

This is the single most powerful content type on LinkedIn. Personal stories are relatable, human, and impossible to replicate. They build trust faster than any other format because people connect with people, not information.

Your story does not need to be extraordinary. A college project that went wrong, a mistake you made in your first month at a job, a rejection that taught you something valuable - these are the stories that get people nodding and sharing. Start the post with a hook that draws people in and let the story do the rest.

Examples of strong opening hooks: "Here is what I learned from failing my first startup." "3 mistakes I made as a new joinee that I wish someone had warned me about." "I got rejected by 14 companies before landing my dream job. Here is what changed."

2. Educational and How-To Content

People come to LinkedIn to learn and stay ahead. If you can teach someone something useful in two minutes, you have added real value to their day — and they will remember you for it.

Educational content builds authority and trust faster than almost anything else. Over time, you become the person your audience associates with a particular topic, and that association is what turns followers into opportunities.

Templates and frameworks for educational posts are included in the resources section of this course.

3. Industry Insights and Opinions

Opinions are one of the most underused content strategies on LinkedIn, and one of the most effective. Pick a trending topic in your industry, share your honest perspective on it, and watch the comments section come alive.

When people disagree with you thoughtfully, that is not a problem — that is engagement. Every comment increases your reach. Healthy debate is one of the fastest ways to grow visibility on the platform.

The important caveat is to always be professional. A strong opinion is not a controversial rant. It is a well-reasoned perspective that invites discussion.

4. Behind the Scenes and Day in the Life

This is the easiest content type to produce, especially on days when you have no time or no ideas. Pick a day, document what it actually looks like, and post it. A day in the life as a final year student navigating placements. A day as a product manager. A day as someone who just quit their job to build something.

People are endlessly curious about how others live and work. This content is low effort, highly relatable, and consistently performs well.

Use this as your emergency content option, on days when you have nothing else, this keeps your streak alive. And streaks matter.

5. Career Milestones and Wins

Got a promotion? Post it. Landed a new job? Post it. Published a research paper, completed a course, got your first client, hit a target, received feedback that made you proud? Post all of it. For reasons that even experienced creators find hard to fully explain, milestone posts perform exceptionally well on LinkedIn. People genuinely celebrate others' wins on this platform in a way that does not happen anywhere else.

The key is not to just announce the win, that gets boring quickly. Pair every milestone with a story or a lesson. What did the journey look like? What did you learn? What would you do differently? That is what transforms a simple announcement into a post people share.

Pro Tip: Do not wait for big wins. Share small updates, early progress, and work in progress. The audience that watches your journey from the beginning becomes your most loyal and engaged community.

6. Questions and Polls

Polls are one of the most underrated engagement tools on LinkedIn. Here is exactly why they work so well.

A poll forces the reader to stop, think, and make a decision. That active participation is psychologically different from passively reading a post. People invest mental energy in polls, which means they invest attention - and attention is exactly what you need the algorithm to notice. The best polls are slightly tricky. Make your audience genuinely think before answering. Then post the correct answer and a detailed explanation in the comments. This drives people to the comments section, which increases engagement further, which increases reach. It is a compounding loop that works every single time when executed well.

Tailor your polls to your niche. A tech creator might post a DSA or system design question. A finance creator might post a market scenario. A marketing professional might post a campaign strategy question. The format is universal - the content should always be relevant to your specific audience.

Two Bonus Content Types Worth Knowing

Memes

LinkedIn memes, when done right, go viral. The rules are simple, keep them professional, keep them relevant to your audience, and keep them relatable to the professional experience. A tech meme will not land with an MBA audience and vice versa.

The important warning here is this: memes and motivational content alone will not build a personal brand. If all you post is memes, you become a meme page, not a person people know, trust, and want to connect with. Brands will not approach you. Serious opportunities will not come. Use memes strategically and occasionally to boost reach and engagement, but always anchor your content strategy in personal brand building.

Motivational Content

Motivational posts perform consistently well on LinkedIn. You do not need to write them from scratch. Look at what performs well on Instagram in the motivation space, adapt the idea into a LinkedIn-appropriate format, and post it. Simple, effective, and low effort.

Same applies, use it as a supplement, not a substitute for personal brand content.

The Golden Rule of LinkedIn Content :

LinkedIn rewards content that does one of three things:

Teaches something. Tells a story. Starts a conversation.

Every post you create should do at least one of these. If it does not, rethink it before posting.

LinkedIn is Not Just for Tech

This needs to be said clearly. LinkedIn is not a tech-only platform. MBA, CA, finance, marketing, HR, consulting, design, law, every professional niche has an active and growing audience on LinkedIn. Every strategy in this course applies equally regardless of your field. The principles are the same. Only the content topic changes.

Section Action Checklist

1. Pick two content types from the six listed above that feel most natural to you and commit to trying both this week.
2. Write three post ideas right now - one personal story, one educational piece, and one opinion on something happening in your industry.
3. Create one poll relevant to your niche and post it. Put the answer and explanation in the comments.
4. Save one relatable meme idea for a low-effort day, but make sure your core content that week is personal brand focused.

The Execution Playbook.

The Structure Behind Every Winning Post :

Whether you are writing a post or building a carousel, the structure is always the same. Three parts, no exceptions:

- Hook - The first two lines of a post or the first slide of a carousel. This is where you either win or lose your reader.
- Body - The core content. The story, the lesson, the data, the opinion. This is where you deliver the value you promised in the hook.

- Call to Action - The last line. Tell your reader what to do next. Follow you, comment their thoughts, share the post, answer a question. Never leave them without a next step.

This structure works because it mirrors how attention works. You earn the read with the hook, you deliver value in the body, and you direct the energy with the CTA. Skip any one of these and the post underperforms.

The Hook is Everything !

If someone is scrolling through their LinkedIn feed and your first two lines or your first carousel slide do not stop them, they are gone. You have lost them before they even gave you a chance. The entire value of your post no matter how good the body is, means nothing if the hook does not land.

This is the one part of your content you should never outsource entirely to AI. Use AI for the body, use it for the carousel slides, use it to structure your ideas. but write the hook yourself, with your audience in mind. The difference in impressions between a generic AI-generated hook and one written with genuine understanding of your audience is significant. Tried, tested, and proven.

On the visual side, remember that the image catches the eye even before the first line of text does. Use a photo that is relevant and relatable to the post. A strong visual hook paired with a strong written hook is the combination that stops the scroll.

Pro Tip: Study the first two lines of posts that made you stop scrolling. Save them. Build a personal swipe file of hooks that worked on you and use them as inspiration when you sit down to write.

Batch Your Content - Work Smarter

You do not need to sit down every day and think of something to post. That approach leads to burnout, inconsistency, and low-quality content. Instead, batch your content creation.

Set aside one to two hours per week, use AI with the prompts provided in the resources section, and create enough content for the entire week in one sitting. Schedule it out and you are done. This keeps your posting consistent without content creation becoming a daily source of stress.

As you get more comfortable with the platform, explore beyond what this course covers. The strategies here are your foundation, not your ceiling.

The Early Growth Hack :

Here is something most people in the growth space know but rarely talk about openly. LinkedIn reach is driven primarily by two things, shares and comments. You cannot fully control how many people share your post, but you can engineer comments in the early days.

WhatsApp and Telegram groups exist specifically for this purpose. Creators join these groups, share their posts, and everyone in the group comments on each other's content. This signals to the LinkedIn algorithm that the post is generating engagement, which pushes it to a wider audience organically.

There is nothing to be ashamed of here. Every major creator used some version of this strategy when they were starting out. Use it until you have a few thousand followers and until you understand the platform well enough to grow on the content's own merit. Then phase it out.

The important caveat , know when to stop. LinkedIn is a credibility platform. Artificially inflated engagement that does not match your content quality or follower count raises red flags for brands and potential collaborators. Use it as a launchpad, not a permanent crutch.

The 60 Day Commitment - The Only Thing That Actually Matters

Everything in this course works. But it only works if you show up consistently. Here is the commitment being asked of you:

For 60 days, post consistently. Try different content types. Study what performed well and why. Recreate the successful formats. Engage with others. Build connections. Follow every strategy laid out in this course without skipping steps.

If you do all of that for 60 days and see no growth, the course fee comes back to you. That is the confidence behind everything taught here.

Keep It Simple - The Tools You Actually Need

There is no need to spend money on tools or subscriptions when you are starting out. Everything you need is free.

Use Google Sheets to track your content. Three columns is all you need - date, content idea, and whether it has been posted. If you want something slightly more structured, Google Sheets has a built-in content calendar template. Use Canva for all design needs. Use AI for content drafting with the prompts provided.

That is it. Simple, free, and effective.

Steal Smart - Learn From What Already Works

Find the biggest creators in your niche and study their most viral posts. What topics did they cover? What hooks did they use? What format worked? Take those successful frameworks and create your own version around them.

Content that has performed well once will almost always perform well again when recreated with a fresh angle. This is not copying, it is learning from data. Every experienced creator does this.

If you want a shortcut, the resources section of this course includes featured viral posts as a starting point for ideas.

Section Action Checklist

1. Write your next post using the Hook, Body, CTA structure. Do not post it until all three parts are solid.
2. Spend 30 minutes this week writing five hook options for your next five posts. Save the ones that feel strongest.

3. Block one to two hours this week for batch content creation. Use the AI prompts in the resources section and create at least five posts in one sitting.
4. Find and join one LinkedIn engagement group on WhatsApp or Telegram this week.
5. Open a Google Sheet right now and set up your content tracker - date, content, posted. Start filling it in today.

LinkedIn Newsletters !

What is a LinkedIn Newsletter?

A LinkedIn newsletter is a long-form content feature built directly into LinkedIn that allows you to publish regular editions on a specific topic and build a dedicated subscriber base, all without leaving the platform.

Think of it as your own mini publication. Every time you publish a new edition, every single subscriber receives both an in-app notification and an email directly in their inbox. This is fundamentally different from a regular post, which lives for a day or two in the feed and then disappears. A newsletter edition stays permanently on your profile, builds over time into an archive of your expertise, and reaches your audience directly, completely bypassing the algorithm.

When a subscriber opts into your newsletter, they are giving you permission to land directly in their email inbox - creating a more loyal and engaged audience that is not solely dependent on the LinkedIn feed algorithm to see your content.

Why LinkedIn Newsletter is a Big Deal?

Most content you post on LinkedIn is at the mercy of the algorithm. Whether a post reaches 500 people or 50,000 depends on early engagement, timing, and factors you cannot fully control. A newsletter removes that uncertainty for your most engaged audience. Your subscribers will hear from you every single time you publish, guaranteed.

Beyond that, LinkedIn newsletters are searchable on Google and other search engines, meaning each edition can appear in search results and extend your visibility well beyond LinkedIn itself reaching people who are not even on the platform.

LinkedIn's internal data shows that close to 30 million members subscribed to at least one newsletter in less than six months of the feature going live, which tells you how quickly this format has been adopted and how much appetite exists for it.

Who Should Start a Newsletter & When ?

A newsletter is not a day-one priority. Focus on building your posting habit, growing your connections, and understanding your audience first. Once you have a consistent presence and a clear sense of what topic you want to own, that is when a newsletter starts making sense.

The right time to start is when you can answer these three questions clearly:

- What specific topic will this newsletter cover?
- Who is it written for?
- Can you commit to publishing consistently, even once a month?

If you cannot answer all three, keep posting regularly until the answers become clear.

How to Set Up Your LinkedIn Newsletter?

To access the newsletter feature, you first need to activate Creator Mode in your Creator Hub. The access criteria include having at least 150 connections, sharing content regularly, and following LinkedIn's Professional Community Policies.

Once Creator Mode is active, setting up your newsletter takes less than five minutes:

- Step 1 : Go to your LinkedIn feed and click "Write Article" at the top of the page.
- Step 2 : In the article writing tool, click "Create a Newsletter."
- Step 3 : Add your newsletter title, a short description of what it covers, how frequently you plan to publish, and an optional logo or cover image.
- Step 4 : Click Done and write your first edition.

Once your first edition is published, LinkedIn automatically sends a notification to your connections and followers inviting them to subscribe. Subscribers then receive a notification and email every time you publish a new edition going forward.

Pro Tip: Choose your newsletter title carefully. It should immediately communicate the specific topic and the value a subscriber will get. A clear, specific title attracts the right subscribers and sets accurate expectations from day on What to Write About ?

The most important decision you will make about your newsletter is choosing a focused topic and sticking to it. A newsletter that tries to cover everything ends up being memorable for nothing.

Pick one area where you have genuine knowledge, experience, or a strong perspective. It should be specific enough that a reader knows exactly what they are signing up for, and broad enough that you can sustain it for months without running out of things to say.

Strong newsletter topic examples:

A software developer writing weekly about system design concepts explained simply. A finance professional writing bi-weekly about personal finance decisions for working professionals in their 20s. A marketer writing monthly about what is actually working in content strategy right now.

The more specific your topic, the more loyal your subscriber base will be.

How Often Should You Publish ?

Consistency matters far more than frequency. A newsletter published once a month without fail is significantly more valuable than one published weekly for a month and then abandoned.

Start with a cadence that is genuinely manageable for you. It is far better to deliver consistently once a month than to promise weekly and miss deadlines. You can always increase frequency as you build the habit.

A general guide based on content type:

Weekly works well for timely content - industry news, trends, what happened this week in your space.

Bi-weekly works well for educational or analytical content where you need more time to produce something genuinely valuable.

Monthly works well for deep dives, long-form perspectives, and high-effort editions that require research and thought.

Growing Your Newsletter Subscribers

Your first wave of subscribers will come automatically when you publish your first edition, LinkedIn notifies your existing connections and followers. After that, growth depends on a few key habits:

Mention your newsletter in your regular posts occasionally. When you publish a new edition, write a regular post summarising the key insight and link to the full newsletter. Add a link to your newsletter in your LinkedIn profile's Featured section. Anyone who visits your profile should be able to find and subscribe in one click.

Cross-promote on other platforms if you are active elsewhere - even a story or a tweet pointing to your newsletter can bring in new subscribers. Engage with every comment on your newsletter editions. This builds community and signals to LinkedIn that the content is worth surfacing to more people.

Additional Insight: The single fastest way to grow newsletter subscribers is to make your regular posts so consistently valuable that people want more. A subscriber who found you through a post is already warm, they subscribed because they actively want to hear from you. Focus on post quality and the newsletter growth follows naturally.

What Makes a Newsletter Worth Subscribing To ?

The newsletters that build large, loyal subscriber bases all share the same core quality they make the reader feel like they are getting something they cannot get anywhere else. That could be a unique perspective, insider knowledge, simplified explanations of complex topics, or just a voice they genuinely enjoy reading.

Generic content that rephrases what everyone else is already saying will not hold subscribers. But a newsletter that consistently delivers a fresh, specific, and genuinely useful perspective will grow steadily and compound over time.

Making Money on LinkedIn

The Question Everyone is Asking

"Do views on LinkedIn pay money?" "Does a company pay you when you post a job?" "You post so consistently, are you actually earning from this?"

These are real questions, and they deserve a straight answer. Here it is: LinkedIn does not pay you for views. There is no ad revenue model like YouTube. No per-impression payout. No monetization dashboard.

But LinkedIn creators do earn and some earn very well. The money just comes from a different place.

Where the Money Actually Comes From ?

There are five real monetization channels on LinkedIn, and understanding all five is important because most creators only ever discover one or two.

- Sponsored Posts : A brand pays you to promote their product or service through your content. You create a post, in your own voice, on your own profile that highlights the brand in a way that is relevant and valuable to your audience. This is the most common and most visible form of LinkedIn monetization.
- Brand Collaborations : These are longer-term or campaign-based partnerships where you work with a brand across multiple posts or activities over a period of time. Instead of a single post, you become part of their marketing campaign. These deals are typically higher value than one-off sponsored posts and build a more sustainable income stream.
- Consulting : As your expertise becomes visible through your content, people begin to trust your knowledge and judgment. At a certain point, individuals and companies will approach you or you can proactively offer to hire you for consulting, strategy, or guidance in your area of expertise. Your LinkedIn presence is essentially a live portfolio of your thinking that makes this possible.

- Services : LinkedIn allows you to list services directly on your profile. Resume building, career coaching, marketing strategy, design, development, financial planning whatever your skill is, your LinkedIn audience is a built-in market for it. Platforms like Topmate make it easy to set up paid calls and sessions that you can promote directly through your content.
- Inbound Leads and Opportunities : This is the most underrated monetization channel. When your content consistently delivers value, people reach out. Job offers, freelance projects, business partnerships, client inquiries, these come to you without you ever pitching. Your content does the selling for you, passively and continuously.

How to Get Your First Sponsored Post ?

The biggest mistake creators make is waiting for brands to come to them. At the beginning, you have to go to the brands. Here is exactly how to approach it strategically.

Mine your own network first : Look at your existing connections and see who has done brand collaborations. Reach out to them not just to ask for a contact, but to have a genuine conversation. Ask them:

Who was the contact at the brand and how did they reach them? What was the timeline from pitch to payment? Did they write the content themselves or did the brand provide a script? What did the brand actually expect in return, impressions, signups, leads? How did they report results - screenshots, analytics PDF? How long did payment take to come through?

Nobody shares these details publicly, but within a genuine relationship, people are surprisingly open. This information is worth more than any course or playbook because it is real, first-hand experience from someone who has actually done it.

Find brands through Instagram : This is one of the most effective and underused tactics for LinkedIn brand deals. Scroll through Instagram reels and identify brands that are actively running influencer campaigns. If a brand is spending money on Instagram creators, they have a budget for influencer marketing. The question is simply whether they have considered LinkedIn yet.

Research the brand, assess whether their product or service is relevant to your LinkedIn audience, and pitch them for a LinkedIn collaboration. Many brands have never been approached this way, which means you are entering a conversation with very little competition.

Pro Tip: When you pitch a brand, lead with your audience. Tell them who follows you, what they care about, and why this brand's product is a natural fit for that audience. A pitch that centres the brand's benefit will always convert better than one that centres your follower count.

Seasonal Campaigns - The Highest Conversion Window

This is a golden opportunity that most creators miss entirely. Brands plan their biggest marketing campaigns around key sales periods - Black Friday, New Year, Republic Day, Independence Day, Christmas, Valentine's Day, and similar high-spend dates.

Here is the critical insight: approach brands two to three weeks before these dates, not on them. By the time the date arrives, campaign budgets have already been allocated and decisions have already been made. If you reach out early, you are part of the planning conversation. If you reach out late, you are told the budget is finished.

Mark these dates in your calendar and build your outreach calendar around them. Consistent seasonal outreach, done early, significantly increases your conversion rate on brand deal pitches.

Protecting Yourself - What Brands Sometimes Do

This needs to be said clearly because it is a real part of working with brands that nobody talks about openly enough.

Some brands will delay payment beyond agreed timelines. Some will try to negotiate terms after the content has already been delivered. Some will offer prolonged barter arrangements instead of cash. These are tactics, not accidents.

Before you create a single piece of content for any brand, have your terms in writing. Agree on the deliverables, the timeline, the payment amount, and the payment date in an email or a formal agreement, not a verbal conversation. When payment is delayed, follow up consistently and professionally. Keep records of every message and email exchange.

Being firm on your terms is not rude, it is professional. The discomfort of having a direct conversation about money upfront is far smaller than the difficulty of chasing delayed payments after the work is done.

Additional Insight: As you build your track record with brand collaborations, create a simple one-page media kit. Include your follower count, average impressions, audience demographics, content niches, and past brand partnerships. This makes you look credible and prepared, and gives brands everything they need to make a decision quickly.

Building Relationships With Brands

The most valuable brand deals are not one-off posts. They are long-term partnerships built on trust, consistent delivery, and genuine alignment between your audience and the brand's product.

Treat every brand collaboration as the beginning of a relationship, not a transaction. Deliver beyond what was agreed. Share the results proactively. Stay in touch after the campaign ends. The brands that see strong results from working with you will come back and they will refer you to other brands in their network.

Networking with other creators in the monetization space works the same way it does in every other area of LinkedIn growth. The creators who share information, support each other's pitches, and build genuine relationships with each other collectively create more opportunities for everyone.

Section Action Checklist

1. List three skills or areas of expertise that you could offer as a service or consulting on LinkedIn today. Add them to your profile's Services section.

2. Identify five creators in your niche who have done brand collaborations. Reach out to at least two of them for a genuine conversation about their experience.
3. Scroll through Instagram reels this week and note down three brands whose products are relevant to your LinkedIn audience. Research each one and draft a basic outreach pitch.
4. Mark the next two major seasonal sales dates in your calendar and set a reminder to begin brand outreach two to three weeks before each one.
5. Draft a simple media kit with your current stats, follower count, average impressions, audience type, and content niche. Update it every month.

The Business of LinkedIn

Your Media Kit - The Foundation of Every Pitch

"Here is my profile, have a look" is not a pitch. A professional creator comes prepared, and that preparation starts with a media kit, a clean, one-page document that gives a brand everything they need to make a decision quickly.

Your media kit should include the following eight elements:

- Total Followers - Your current followers count on LinkedIn and any other relevant platforms.
- Average Impressions Per Post - How many people your content typically reaches. This is the number brands care about most at the awareness stage.
- Engagement Rate - The percentage of your audience that actively likes, comments, or shares your content. This tells a brand how alive and responsive your audience actually is, not just how large it is.
- Audience Breakdown - Who your audience is. Geography, professional stage, industry. For example: 80% India based, 60% working professionals, 25% students, top industries being tech and finance. The more specific this is, the more useful it is to a brand deciding whether your audience matches their target customer.
- Top Performing Posts - Two or three of your best posts as proof of performance. Show the impressions, the engagement, and the response. These are your case studies. You can also feature these directly on your LinkedIn profile's Featured section so brands can see them without even asking.

- Past Collaborations - Brands you have worked with previously. This is credibility by association. If you are just starting out and have no past collaborations yet, skip this section and add it as soon as your first deal is done.
- Clear Niche - Exactly what topic you create content around. Career growth, tech, finance, MBA, marketing, HR, entrepreneurship, be specific. A brand should know within seconds whether your content space aligns with their product.
- Contact Details - Make it effortless for a brand to reach you. An email address is enough. Do not make them hunt for it.

Pro Tip: Keep your media kit updated every month. As your numbers grow, your pricing power grows with them. A stale media kit with outdated numbers undersells you.

Think Like a Marketer, Not Just a Creator

Here is the mindset shift that separates creators who close deals consistently from those who struggle to get responses. Brands do not care about your follower count in isolation. They care about return on investment. Every rupee they spend on a collaboration needs to come back to them in sales, traffic, signups, or brand awareness that they can measure.

When you pitch a brand, do not lead with your numbers. Lead with their outcome. Instead of saying "I have 45,000 followers and average 20,000 impressions," say "My audience is primarily working professionals in India actively making career and purchasing decisions. I create value-driven content that my audience trusts, which means when I recommend something, they act on it."

The first statement makes you sound like a number. The second makes you sound like a growth partner. Brands pay significantly more for growth partners than they do for reach.

What to Charge - Pricing With Data, Not Guesswork

Pricing is where most creators either leave money on the table or lose deals entirely. The fix is simple, base your pricing on data, not on what feels comfortable or what you think a brand wants to hear.

The factors that determine your rate are your average impressions per post, your engagement rate, your audience quality, and your niche. A highly engaged, niche-specific audience commands a higher rate than a large but passive general audience.

A practical approach to pricing:

Do not quote high on your very first deal. Your first collaboration is as much about building a reference and a case study as it is about income. Crack the first deal at a reasonable rate, deliver exceptional results, and use that as the foundation to increase your pricing on every deal that follows.

Once you have a few collaborations behind you, set a minimum rate and do not go below it under any circumstances. When a brand offers less than your minimum, politely decline and move on. This protects not just your income but the entire creator ecosystem. When creators consistently undercharge or work for free, brands develop an expectation of cheap or free content that makes fair pricing harder for every creator in the market.

The Barter Trap - Why Free Collaborations Hurt Everyone ?

Barter collaborations, where a brand offers you a free product instead of payment are one of the most common traps for early-stage creators. The logic sounds reasonable: you get a product, they get content, everyone wins.

The reality is different. You spend time creating content. The brand gets a paying customer's worth of exposure. You get a product you may not have even wanted. And the next creator who approaches that brand for a paid deal gets told "we usually do barter."

Free and barter collaborations pollute the market for every creator. Be professional from your very first deal. If you are going to collaborate with a brand, do it on structured, paid terms with clear deliverables, clear pricing, and clear expectations. That is how you build a sustainable income, not a hobby.

Negotiating When a Brand Lowballs You.

When a brand offers significantly less than your rate, you have two options, negotiate or walk away. Both are valid. What is not valid is silently accepting less than your worth because the conversation felt uncomfortable.

A simple negotiation framework:

Counter with your rate and justify it with your data. If they cannot meet your rate, offer a reduced scope for a reduced price, one post instead of two, for example - rather than reducing the price for the same amount of work. If they still cannot align with fair terms, wish them well and end the conversation cleanly. Do not argue and do not apologise for knowing your worth.

The brands worth working with long-term are the ones who respect your pricing. The ones who do not are rarely worth the energy of a deal.

Turning One Deal Into Many

Closing a single sponsored post is good. Building a long-term relationship with a brand is significantly better. Once a collaboration goes well, do not disappear. Follow up with results. Show them the impressions, the comments, the clicks. Then proactively offer them more.

Package options you can pitch for continuity:

A three-post series spread across a month. A one-month brand association with regular mentions and a dedicated post. A webinar or live session combined with supporting posts. A cross-platform bundle covering both LinkedIn and Instagram.

Retention is where real income comes from. A brand that trusts you and keeps coming back is worth far more than constantly hunting for new deals.

The Trust Rule - Do Not Become a Walking Billboard

One of the fastest ways to destroy the audience trust you have spent months building is to over-monetize. If every other post is sponsored, your audience stops trusting your recommendations and when audience trust drops, brand deals drop with it. The two are directly connected.

A simple rule that works:

For every two to three sponsored posts, publish at least four posts of pure, unsponsored value. Your audience should always feel that your primary motivation is to help them, with brand collaborations as an occasional addition not the other way around.

Additional Insight: The creators who command the highest brand deal rates are almost always the ones whose audiences trust them most. That trust is built through consistent, genuine, non-promotional content. Protect it like the asset it is because it is the direct source of your earning power.

The LinkedIn Side Hustle Formula

LinkedIn monetization works as passive income and it is not luck. It is a system, and the system has three components that all need to work together:

- Consistency - Showing up regularly with content that your audience finds valuable.
- Positioning - Being known for a specific topic so that the right brands and the right opportunities find you.
- Smart Outreach - Proactively and strategically approaching brands rather than waiting to be discovered.

When all three are working together, paid collaborations become a natural and recurring outcome rather than a rare stroke of luck.

Section Action Checklist

1. Build your media kit this week using the eight elements listed above. Use Canva to keep it clean and professional.
2. Revisit your pitch language. Write one paragraph that leads with the brand's outcome rather than your follower count. Use this in every future pitch.
3. Set your minimum rate right now based on your current impressions and engagement data. Write it down. Do not go below it.

4. If you have an existing brand relationship, proactively reach out this week with a multi-post or monthly association package proposal.
5. Audit your last ten posts. Count how many were sponsored versus value-driven. Adjust your content balance if needed.

LinkedIn Business Page

What is a LinkedIn Business Page?

A LinkedIn Business Page is a dedicated page that represents your company, brand, or venture on LinkedIn, completely separate from your personal profile. Think of it as your business's own LinkedIn account. You post on behalf of the brand, engage with content as the business, and build a following that is connected to the company rather than to you as an individual.

People come to your business page to learn more about the company, what it sells, what it stands for, who works there, and what values it embodies. For anyone building a brand, a startup, a freelance business, or a venture like OwnUrGrowth, a Business Page gives you a professional, credible presence that exists independently of any one person.

Personal Profile vs Business Page - Which One Matters More?

This is an important distinction to understand before you invest time in a Business Page.

Your personal profile will almost always outperform your Business Page in reach, engagement, and lead generation, especially in the early stages. Data from thousands of professionals consistently shows that personal profiles generate significantly better engagement and lead generation results than company pages. People connect with people on LinkedIn, not logos.

That said, a Business Page serves a different purpose. It builds institutional credibility, creates a searchable presence for your brand, allows you to run LinkedIn Ads, and gives your business a home that exists beyond your personal activity. Use both but prioritise your personal profile first and treat the Business Page as a supporting asset.

How to Set Up Your LinkedIn Business Page - Step by Step

Creating a Business Page takes less than ten minutes.

- Step 1 : Log into your personal LinkedIn account. A personal profile is required before you can create a Business Page.
- Step 2 : Click the "For Business" icon in the top right corner of your LinkedIn homepage and select "Create a Company Page."
- Step 3 : Choose your page type. For most people reading this course, "Small Business" is the right option. If you are creating a sub-page for a specific product or division under an existing company page, choose "Showcase Page."
- Step 4 : Fill in your business details - company name, LinkedIn URL, website, industry, company size, and company type.
- Step 5 : Upload your logo (300 x 300 pixels recommended) and your cover image (1128 x 191 pixels recommended). These are the first visual impressions anyone gets of your brand.
- Step 6 : Write your company description. You have up to 2,000 characters. Include your story, what you do, who you serve, and what makes you different. Use keywords your target audience would actually search for.
- Step 7 : Add a tagline of up to 120 characters. This is your one-line pitch for the brand, make it specific and clear.
- Step 8 : Review everything, tick the verification box confirming you are authorised to create the page, and click "Create Page."

Pages with complete information get 30% more weekly views than incomplete pages. Fill out every single field before you start posting.

Optimising Your Page After Creation

Creating the page is step one. Optimising it is what makes it actually work.

Complete every section : About, specialties, website, contact information, and location. An incomplete page looks abandoned and loses credibility instantly.

Use keywords strategically : Your page description and tagline are indexed by both LinkedIn and Google. Your page name and URL should match your official business name for SEO purposes, but your tagline is where you can incorporate strategic keywords that describe what you actually do.

Add a CTA button : LinkedIn allows you to add a custom call-to-action button on your page such as "Visit Website," "Contact Us," or "Sign Up." Make sure this button directs visitors to the most important destination for your business.

Feature your best content : Use the Featured section to showcase top-performing posts, case studies, or product pages. This is the first thing a visitor sees when they land on your page and should immediately communicate your value.

Add your Products section : You can use the Products section on your LinkedIn Business Page to showcase reviews, testimonials, and bottom-of-funnel content like case studies. This builds social proof and attracts a targeted audience.

Growing Your Business Page Following

Your first followers will come from your personal network. Start growing your page followers by inviting people in your LinkedIn network - customers, partners, advisors, and prospective clients who already know your business. When your team invites their own connections, your page reach grows even faster. Beyond the initial push, here is how you grow consistently:

Mention your Business Page in your personal profile posts occasionally. Cross-promote on other platforms. Ask employees and collaborators to list the company as their workplace on their personal profiles, this creates a direct link from their profile to your page, driving organic traffic. When someone engages with your page's content, LinkedIn allows you to invite them to follow the page, do this consistently.

Additional Insight: A good time to create a LinkedIn Business Page for early-stage startups is after you get your first set of clients. You can then use the Products section to showcase real testimonials and case studies as proof of your work. Launching a page with zero social proof is harder than launching one with even two or three strong testimonials already in place.

What to Post on Your Business Page

The content strategy for a Business Page is different from a personal profile. Your personal profile is where you share stories, opinions, and personal experiences. Your Business Page is where you build the brand - its voice, its expertise, and its credibility.

Content types that work well on a Business Page:

- Company updates and announcements : New offerings, milestones, launches, partnerships. Give your audience a reason to follow the page by keeping them informed.
- Behind the scenes content : How the team works, what the process looks like, what goes into building the product or service. This humanises the brand and builds trust.
- Educational content relevant to your niche : Position the brand as an authority by consistently publishing content that teaches your target audience something valuable.
- Customer success stories and case studies : Real outcomes from real clients are the most credible content any business can post. Even a short testimonial formatted as a post performs significantly better than a promotional announcement.
- Reposts from team members' personal profiles : If your team is active on LinkedIn personally, resharing their relevant content on the Business Page amplifies both the individual's reach and the brand's visibility simultaneously.

Companies that post weekly see two times higher engagement than those that post less frequently. Consistency matters as much on a Business Page as it does on a personal profile.

LinkedIn Ads - When and Why to Use Them ?

One of the most significant advantages a Business Page has over a personal profile is access to LinkedIn's advertising platform. Once your page is set up, you can run targeted paid campaigns directly to the professional audience you want to reach.

LinkedIn Ads allow you to target by job title, industry, company size, seniority level, location, and more. For B2B businesses, lead generation campaigns, and course promotions targeting specific professional demographics, this targeting precision is extremely powerful.

That said, LinkedIn Ads require a budget and should only be considered once your organic presence is established and you have a clear, tested offer to promote. Running ads to a weak page with no social proof or to an offer that has not been validated organically is an expensive way to learn what does not work.

Pro Tip: Before spending on ads, make sure your Business Page is fully optimised, your content is consistent, and you have clear social proof on the page. Ads amplify what is already there, they do not fix what is missing.

Tracking Performance - What to Measure ?

LinkedIn provides built-in analytics for Business Pages that show you follower growth, post impressions, engagement rates, and visitor demographics. Use these metrics consistently to understand what content is working and what is not.

The three numbers worth tracking most closely are follower growth rate, average post impressions, and engagement rate. Together, these tell you whether your audience is growing, whether your content is reaching them, and whether they are actually engaging with what you post. Make decisions based on this data, not on gut feel.

Beyond Brand Deals

The Most Underrated Monetization Strategy - Your Own Services

Brand collaborations are one income stream. But the creators who build truly sustainable income on LinkedIn do not stop there. They leverage the trust they have built with their audience to sell their own services and that is where the real compounding begins.

Here is what that looks like in practice. After building genuine trust with over thousands of followers through consistent, valuable content, the natural next step was to offer direct guidance to the people who were already asking for it. 1:1 calls through Topmate. Real conversations with real people about their specific problems career decisions, LinkedIn growth, job search strategy in areas where the knowledge and experience to help them already existed.

The impact of this goes beyond the income. Every person you help through a direct service becomes one of your most loyal followers. They have experienced your value firsthand. They trust you not because of your follower count but because you solved a real problem for them. That kind of credibility cannot be manufactured through content alone, it has to be earned through genuine impact.

Do not depend entirely on brand collaborations. Cross-sell your own services and products to your audience. The trust you build through content is the foundation, what you build on top of it is entirely up to you.

The Level Framework - Progress is Never Wasted

Here is a way to think about your LinkedIn journey that will keep you going when results feel slow.

Imagine your goals on LinkedIn as four levels. Level 1 is building a consistent presence and a growing audience. Level 2 is establishing credibility and receiving inbound opportunities - job offers, referrals, collaborations. Level 3 is monetizing actively through brand deals, services, and consulting. Level 4 is the full vision of whatever your ultimate goal on the platform looks like for you.

Your target is Level 4. But here is what most people miss even if you do not reach Level 4 in your target timeline, you will cross Level 2 and possibly Level 3. And nothing you did to get there is wasted.

You set out wanting brand collaborations but they have not come yet? The network you built along the way might bring you a job offer. Someone in your audience might become a paying client. A connection made through your content might lead to a partnership or a funding conversation. You genuinely never know which action leads to which outcome on LinkedIn but every action compounds.

This is not a theory. It is a lived experience. LinkedIn has a way of delivering results that you were not even specifically chasing, because the visibility and credibility you build open doors you did not know existed.

The Decision You Will Never Regret

Every strategy, framework, and tactic in this course works. But all of it starts with one decision, to show up consistently and give LinkedIn a real chance.

Not two weeks. Not five posts. Sixty days of genuine, consistent effort. That is the commitment being asked of you. And the confidence behind that ask comes from having lived it personally and having watched hundreds of others live it too.

The decision to take LinkedIn seriously is one of the few professional decisions you can make today that will compound in your favour for years. Whatever stage you are at student, professional, or business owner the best time to start was yesterday. The second best time is right now.

What Comes After This Course - Your Support System

Buying this course is the beginning, not the end. Here is exactly what happens next.

Within the first week of purchasing, start implementing. Explore, experiment, and begin posting. Do not wait until everything feels perfect, it never will. Start messy and get better in the process.

Within the first month, you will have experimented enough to have real questions, specific doubts about your content, your profile, your outreach, or your strategy. Bring those questions to the first live QnA session held one month after your purchase. This is a direct, personal conversation, not a pre-recorded answer.

By the second month, you will have data. You will know what is working and what is not. The second live QnA session at the two-month mark is where you refine your strategy based on real results and real experience.

And beyond those two sessions - the support does not stop. Updates, new learnings, and continued guidance will always be available. This community does not close after sixty days.

Section Action Checklist

1. Write down your Level 4 - your ultimate goal on LinkedIn. Be specific. Then write what Level 2 and Level 3 look like for you. This is your roadmap.
2. Identify one service or skill you could offer directly to your audience through a platform like Topmate. Set it up before your thirtieth day of posting.

3. Commit to sixty days starting today. Write the date sixty days from now somewhere visible.
4. Mark your calendar for the Month 1 and Month 2 live QnA sessions.
5. Close this document and post your first piece of content today. Everything else follows from that first step.

The Final Pro Tip

Your Content Must Be Worth Someone's Time !

Every person who stops scrolling to read your post is making a small bet. They are betting that what you have written is worth sixty seconds of their day. Your only job as a creator is to make sure that bet pays off, every single time.

Here is the harsh reality. If someone reads your post and finishes it thinking "that was a waste of my time, I learned nothing, I did not laugh, nothing changed for me", they will remember you. Not positively. They will remember your name as the person whose content they should skip. And no matter how good your future posts become, that association is extremely difficult to undo.

A negative brand image is far more damaging than no brand image at all. You can recover from being unknown. Recovering from being known as someone whose content wastes people's time is a much longer and harder road.

The Two Line Test

Before you post anything, apply this simple test. Read your first two lines and ask yourself honestly, if I were a stranger scrolling past this, would I stop? Would I feel curious, intrigued, or compelled to read more?

If the answer is no, rewrite the hook before you post. The body of your content can be exceptional, but it means nothing if the first two lines do not earn the read.

And once someone does read through, ask yourself whether they walked away with something. A lesson. A laugh. A new perspective. A practical insight they can use. If the answer is nothing, the post is not ready.

Every piece of content you publish should pass both tests, a hook that earns the click and a body that justifies the time.

Protect Your Reputation Like the Asset It Is

Your personal brand on LinkedIn is built post by post, interaction by interaction, over months and years. It is one of the slowest things to build and one of the fastest things to damage. Be intentional about every piece of content that goes out under your name.

This does not mean every post needs to be perfect. It means every post needs to have genuine intent behind it, to teach something, share something real, or start a conversation worth having. Content posted just to maintain a streak, with nothing of value inside it, chips away at the trust your audience has placed in you.

Quality and consistency are not opposites. You can show up every day and still make every post worth someone's time. That combination, reliability plus value is what builds a personal brand that lasts.

There Will Be Hard Days - Keep Going Anyway

No growth journey is a straight line. There will be posts that flop despite your best effort. There will be weeks where nothing seems to work. There will be moments where you question whether any of this is worth it.

That is normal. That is part of the process for every creator at every level. The difference between those who grow and those who quit is not talent, not timing, and not luck. It is the decision to keep going when results are not visible yet.

You have everything you need. The strategies are here. The framework is clear. The only variable left is your consistency.

A Final Word

You have reached the end of this course. But in every real sense, you are just at the beginning.

Start today. Not tomorrow, not after you feel more prepared, not once your profile looks perfect. Today. Post something. Reach out to someone. Leave a meaningful comment. Take one action that moves you forward.

LinkedIn will reward you for showing up. It may not happen in the first week or the first month, but it will happen. Stay consistent, stay genuine, keep learning, and keep growing.

See you at the live QnA. Until then - mehnat karo, grow karo !

Section Action Checklist

1. Before publishing your next post, apply the two line test. If the hook does not make you want to read more, rewrite it.
2. After writing any post, ask yourself — what does the reader walk away with? If the answer is nothing, add value before posting.
3. Write down three content ideas right now that you know would genuinely help your target audience. Schedule them for this week.
4. On days when motivation is low, post something small rather than nothing at all. Consistency beats perfection every time.

The Prompt Vault - Complete Edition !

Topic 1 — LinkedIn Headline

Type 1 — Quick

"Write 3 LinkedIn headline options for a [your role, e.g. software engineer / MBA student / freelance designer]. Keep each under 200 characters. Make them specific and outcome focused."

Sample Output: "Software Engineer helping early-stage startups build scalable products | Python, AWS, System Design"

Type 2 — Standard

"Write 5 LinkedIn headline options for me. Role: [your current role or status] Audience I help: [who you work with or help] Value I deliver: [what outcome you create] Keep each under 220 characters. Avoid generic phrases like 'passionate about' or 'aspiring'."

Sample Output: "Helping CS students from tier 2 and 3 colleges crack FAANG | SWE at Google | Sharing what actually worked"

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write 7 LinkedIn headline options for me. Here are my full details: Current role or status: [e.g. Final year CS student] Company or college: [e.g. VIT Pune] Who I help: [e.g. Students trying to break into top tech companies] What outcome I create: [e.g. Help them land their first FAANG internship] My top skills: [e.g. DSA, system design, competitive programming] My content niche on LinkedIn: [e.g. Career growth in tech for non-IIT students] Tone I want: [e.g. Confident, direct, no fluff] Mix formats — some short and punchy, some descriptive. No generic phrases."

Sample Output: "Final year CS student → FAANG-focused | Cracked Google internship from a tier 3 college | Sharing the full playbook"

Type 4 — Situation Specific (For Students)

"Write 5 LinkedIn headlines specifically for a college student with no work experience yet. They are in [year and branch, e.g. 3rd year Computer Science]. Their goal on LinkedIn is [e.g. landing a software engineering internship at a top company]. They have [mention any projects, achievements, or skills, e.g. built two full-stack projects and solved 300+ LeetCode problems]. Make the headlines aspirational but honest — no fake credentials."

Sample Output: "3rd Year CS Student | 300+ LeetCode | Building in public | Targeting SWE internships at top tech companies."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is my current LinkedIn headline: [paste your existing headline] Problems with it: [e.g. too vague / sounds like everyone else / does not mention who I help] Rewrite it into 5 better versions. Keep each under 220 characters. Make them specific, outcome focused, and memorable."

Sample Output: Original: "Software Engineer | Passionate about technology | Open to opportunities" Rewritten: "Software Engineer at [Company] | Building backend systems that scale | Helping CS students navigate their first tech job"

Topic 2 — About Section

Type 1 — Quick

"Write a LinkedIn About section for me in first person. I am a [your role]. I help [your audience] with [what you help them do]. My tone should be [e.g. conversational and direct]. Keep it under 150 words. End with a call to action."

Sample Output: "I am a software engineer at a MAANG company who spends most of my spare time helping students from smaller colleges break into top tech.

On LinkedIn I share everything I learned the hard way — DSA strategy, system design, and what no one tells you about the interview process.

If you are preparing for FAANG, follow along. I post three times a week. DMs are open if you need help."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write a LinkedIn About section for me. Who I am: [your background in one line] What I do professionally: [your work or study] What I am passionate about: [what drives you] What I share on LinkedIn: [your content topics] Call to action: [what you want people to do — follow, DM, visit website] Tone: [e.g. conversational, no corporate jargon] Keep it between 150 and 200 words. Start with a hook."

Sample Output: "Three years ago I was sending cold applications into the void, getting no responses, wondering what I was doing wrong.

Today I am a software engineer at [Company] and spend half my time helping people avoid the exact mistakes I made.

I post about DSA, system design, and the career game nobody teaches you in college. No fluff, no gatekeeping — just the real strategy that works, especially if you are not from an IIT or NIT.

If you are a student or early-career professional navigating tech hiring, follow along. DMs open for anyone who needs direction."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write a LinkedIn About section for me in first person. Here are all my details: My background: [e.g. 3 years as SWE at a MAANG company, tier 3 college background] My professional work: [e.g. build backend systems for a fintech product used by 10 million users] My LinkedIn content niche: [e.g. career growth in tech, DSA, system design] My target audience: [e.g. students and early-career engineers from non-IIT colleges] What I have achieved that builds credibility: [e.g. helped 200+ students, 45K followers, featured in XYZ] Services I offer: [e.g. 1-on-1 career coaching, resume reviews, mock interviews on Topmate] My personality and tone: [e.g. direct, honest, no motivational fluff] CTA: [e.g. follow for weekly posts, book a session on Topmate] Length: 220 to 260 words. Start with a story or a strong hook, not 'Hi I am'. No corporate buzzwords."

Sample Output: "I got rejected by 11 companies before I cracked my first FAANG interview.

Not because I lacked talent. Because I was preparing the wrong things, the wrong way, for far too long — and nobody around me knew any different.

I am a software engineer at [Company] by day. I build backend systems for a product used by millions. Outside of work, I have spent the last two years doing the thing I wish someone had done for me — giving honest, practical guidance to students and early-career engineers who are figuring out the tech industry without the advantage of a top college or a strong network.

On LinkedIn I post three times a week about DSA strategy, system design, and the career game the top colleges never bother to teach. Over 45,000 people follow along, and I am proud that a large part of that audience comes from exactly the background I come from.

If any of this resonates, follow along. If you want more personalised help — a resume review, a mock interview, or just someone to tell you honestly what is and is not working in your prep — you can book a session with me on Topmate. Link in the featured section.

The playing field is not level. But it is more navigable than you think."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (For Business Owners)

"Write a LinkedIn About section for a business owner or freelancer. Here are the details: Business or service: [e.g. LinkedIn ghostwriting and content strategy for founders] Target client: [e.g. startup founders and coaches who want to grow on LinkedIn but do not have time to post] Result I deliver: [e.g. help them go from 0 to 5000 followers in 90 days with organic content] My credibility: [e.g. managed accounts for 10+ clients, grown personal LinkedIn to 20K followers] Tone: [e.g. professional but approachable] CTA: [e.g. DM me to discuss working together] Keep it between 150 and 200 words. Make it feel like a pitch that does not feel like a pitch."

Sample Output: "Most founders know they should be on LinkedIn. Very few actually make it work.

The problem is usually not the idea — it is the time, the consistency, and knowing exactly what to say to the right audience.

I run a LinkedIn content and ghostwriting service for founders, coaches, and consultants who want to build a genuine presence on the platform without spending hours a week writing posts.

My clients have gone from zero to 5,000 followers in under 90 days. Some have closed clients directly from LinkedIn within the first month of working together. All of them have stopped guessing and started growing.

If you are building something worth talking about and need someone to help you say it well — DM me. Happy to have a 15-minute conversation about what that could look like for you."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is my current LinkedIn About section: [paste your existing About section] What I think is wrong with it: [e.g. too formal / sounds like a resume / no clear audience / weak CTA] Rewrite it keeping the core facts but making it more human, more engaging, and more specific. Keep the same length or shorter. Same tone as: [e.g. Ashwini's LinkedIn — direct, honest, conversational]."

Topic 3 — Experience Entry Rewriting

Type 1 — Quick

"Rewrite this LinkedIn experience entry to show impact, not just responsibilities: [paste your current entry]. Use strong action verbs and add numbers where possible."

Sample Output: Before: "Worked on the backend team and helped fix issues."
After: "Resolved 12 critical backend bugs over a 3-month internship, reducing system error rate by an estimated 30% and directly improving checkout reliability."

Type 2 — Standard

"Rewrite my LinkedIn experience entry into 3 to 4 strong bullet points. Job title: [e.g. Product Management Intern] Company: [e.g. Razorpay] What I actually did: [e.g. conducted user research, wrote PRDs, ran sprint planning] Any results or outcomes: [e.g. feature I worked on launched to 50K users] Start each bullet with an action verb. Focus on impact over activity."

Sample Output: "Led end-to-end user research for a new onboarding feature, conducting 20+ interviews that directly shaped the product brief. Authored 3 PRDs adopted into the sprint cycle, reducing back-and-forth between product and engineering by streamlining requirements documentation. Contributed to the launch of a checkout improvement feature rolled out to 50,000+ users within two weeks of going live."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Rewrite my LinkedIn experience entry into 4 to 5 strong, specific bullet points. Job title: [e.g. Software Engineering Intern] Company: [e.g. Swiggy] Team or domain: [e.g. payments backend] Duration: [e.g. May to August 2024] What I built or worked on: [describe in plain language] Any metrics or outcomes you know: [e.g. reduced API response time, feature went live, test coverage improved] Technologies used: [e.g. Python, Django, PostgreSQL, Redis] Cross-functional work: [e.g. worked with design and product teams] Make each bullet start with a strong action verb. Quantify wherever possible. If exact numbers are unknown, use conservative estimates or qualitative impact statements."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (For Students With No Internship)

"I am a student with no formal work experience. Help me rewrite my college projects and extracurricular activities into LinkedIn experience entries that still look professional and impressive. Project or activity: [e.g. Built a full-stack e-commerce app as a college project] Tech or skills used: [e.g. React, Node.js, MongoDB] What I did specifically: [e.g. designed the database, built the cart feature, deployed on AWS] Any outcome or feedback: [e.g. Professor gave it as a reference to junior batch, got 40 GitHub stars] Write 2 to 3 bullet points as if it were a real work experience entry."

Sample Output: "Designed and developed a full-stack e-commerce platform using React, Node.js, and MongoDB, implementing a complete cart and checkout flow from scratch. Deployed the application on AWS with a basic CI pipeline, gaining hands-on experience with cloud infrastructure and production-level deployment. Repository received 40+ GitHub stars and was referenced by the course instructor as a learning resource for the following batch."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is my current experience entry: [paste entry] It reads too much like a job description. Rewrite it to sound like achievements, not responsibilities. Keep the same facts but change the framing entirely. Add quantification wherever it is reasonable to estimate."

Topic 4 — Cover Image Tagline

Type 1 — Quick

"Write 5 short taglines for my LinkedIn cover image. I am a [your role] who helps [your audience] with [what you do]. Keep each under 10 words. Make them punchy and memorable."

Sample Output: "Helping engineers go from campus to MAANG."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write 5 cover image taglines for my LinkedIn profile. My role: [e.g. Career coach for tech professionals] My audience: [e.g. Software engineers looking to grow their career] My key value: [e.g. Helping people go from stuck to promoted] Style: [e.g. Direct and confident] Keep each under 12 words. These will appear as text on a Canva-designed cover image."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write 8 cover image tagline options for my LinkedIn profile. I need options in different styles — some outcome-focused, some identity-based, some question-based. My name: [optional] My role: [e.g. LinkedIn Content Strategist and Career Coach] My niche: [e.g. Helping professionals build a LinkedIn presence that works] My audience: [e.g. Working professionals and students] Tone options I like: [e.g. Bold, warm, direct] My brand name if any: [e.g. OwnUrGrowth] For each tagline suggest where it would work best — profile, newsletter banner, or course landing page."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (For Personal Brand Builders)

"Write 5 cover image taglines for someone building a personal brand on LinkedIn. They want people to immediately understand what they stand for when they land on the profile. Core message: [e.g. You do not need a top college or connections to build a career you are proud of]. Keep each under 10 words. Make it feel like a belief statement, not a service description."

Sample Output: "Your college name is not your ceiling."

Type 5 — Refinement

"My current cover image tagline is: [paste current tagline]. It feels [e.g. too generic / too long / unclear]. Rewrite it into 5 sharper versions that say the same thing more memorably. Keep each under 12 words."

Networking Prompts :

Topic 5 — Connection Request Note

Type 1 — Quick

"Write a LinkedIn connection request note under 200 characters. I am sending it to a [their role] at [their company]. I want to connect because [one genuine reason]. Make it feel human, not copy-pasted."

Sample Output: "Hi [Name], your post on burnout in tech really resonated. I am a fellow engineer navigating similar challenges — would love to connect and learn from your perspective."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write 3 LinkedIn connection request notes under 250 characters each. Who I am sending it to: [their role and company] Why I genuinely want to connect: [honest reason] Something specific about them I noticed: [a post, achievement, or detail from their profile] My background in one line: [who I am] Do not mention jobs, referrals, or asks. Keep it purely about connecting."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write 5 LinkedIn connection request notes for me, each under 280 characters. Recipient details: [their role, company, and anything notable about them] Specific thing I noticed about them: [post content, career milestone, something from their profile] Genuine reason for connecting: [what draws me to them] My background: [who I am in one line] My goal with this connection long term: [e.g. learn from them, be in their network, potential collaboration] Write 5 different tones — professional, conversational, curiosity-led, compliment-led, and shared interest-led."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (For Students Reaching Out to Seniors)

"Write 5 LinkedIn connection request notes from a college student reaching out to a senior professional or alumni. The student is from [college name or tier] in [branch/field]. They are reaching out to someone who is now at [company or role]. They want to [reason — e.g. learn about their career path, get advice, understand their industry]. Keep each under 250 characters. Make them respectful but not overly formal or sycophantic."

Sample Output: "Hi [Name], came across your profile while researching careers in product management. Your journey from engineering to PM at [Company] is exactly the path I am trying to understand. Would love to connect."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is my current connection request note: [paste note]. It feels [e.g. too generic / too formal / too long]. Rewrite it into 3 better versions — one short and punchy, one warm and personal, one curiosity-driven. All under 280 characters."

Building Connections Prompts :

Topic 6 — Cold Outreach DM

Type 1 — Quick

"Write a LinkedIn DM under 100 words to [describe the person — their role and why you are reaching out]. My ask is [one specific thing]. Lead with something genuine about them before making the ask."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write a LinkedIn cold outreach DM for me. Who I am messaging: [their role, company, and something specific about them] What I noticed about them: [a post, their career story, something from their profile] What I want: [specific ask — referral, advice call, collaboration] My background: [who I am in one line] Instruction: Do not open with the ask. Build genuine context first. Keep the full message under 120 words."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write a LinkedIn cold outreach DM for me. Recipient: [name, role, company] Something personal or professional I know about them: [post they wrote, book they published, achievement, interest] Why I specifically chose them and not someone else: [be specific] My ask: [exactly what I want — a 15 min call, a referral, feedback on my work] My background: [who I am and why I am relevant] Tone: [e.g. confident but not desperate, warm but professional] Length: under 150 words. Write 3 versions — one that leads with their content, one that leads with a shared experience, and one that leads with a specific question about their work."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (For Referral Requests)

"Write a LinkedIn DM to ask for a referral at [company name]. I am reaching out to a [their role] who works there. I know [specific thing about them — post, interest, or background]. My background: [relevant details — college, skills, projects, internships]. The role I am applying for: [job title and department]. Instruction: Do not ask for the referral in the first message. Build a genuine connection first. Write two messages — the first one that builds rapport, and the second follow-up where the referral request is made naturally."

Sample Output: Message 1: "Hi [Name], came across your post about your journey from a tier 3 college to [Company] — the part about how you approached your system design prep was genuinely useful. I am in a similar position right now. Would love to connect and hear more about your experience if you are open to it."

Message 2: "Hi [Name], really appreciated our last conversation — your advice about focusing on distributed systems concepts changed how I am approaching prep. I wanted to ask — I have applied for the SWE role at [Company] and was wondering if a referral is something you would be comfortable with, given my background. No pressure at all if not — just thought it was worth asking."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is a cold outreach DM I sent that got no response: [paste message]. Analyse what is wrong with it and rewrite it into a version that is more likely to get a reply. Explain the two or three key changes you made and why."

Topic 7 — Follow-Up Message

Type 1 — Quick

"Write a short LinkedIn follow-up message under 50 words. I messaged [their role] about [topic] around [X] days ago and got no reply. Be polite and confident. Do not repeat the full ask."

Sample Output: "Hi [Name], just circling back on my message from last week — completely understand if things are busy. Wanted to make sure it did not get buried. No rush at all."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write 3 follow-up LinkedIn messages for the same scenario — one sent after 3 days, one after 7 days, and one final message after 14 days. Context: I reached out to [their role] about [what I asked for]. They have not responded. Tone: Polite, professional, not desperate. Each message should be under 70 words and feel slightly different in approach."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write follow-up messages for a LinkedIn outreach sequence. Original message topic: [what I asked for] Who I messaged: [their role and context] Follow-up 1 (3 days): Gentle, assume they are busy, restate value briefly. Follow-up 2 (7 days): Slightly more direct, add a new piece of value or context. Follow-up 3 (14 days): Final message, leave the door open for the future without pressure. Keep each under 80 words. Make all three feel like natural, human messages not a sales sequence."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (After a Networking Event or Webinar)

"Write a LinkedIn follow-up message to someone I met or interacted with at [event name or webinar topic]. We [briefly describe the interaction — commented on the same post, were both in a LinkedIn Live, etc.]. I want to continue the conversation and [what I want — stay in touch, ask a question, collaborate]. Keep it under 100 words. Reference the specific event or interaction so it does not feel cold."

Type 5 — Refinement

"My follow-up message got ignored again. Here it is: [paste message]. What is it doing wrong? Rewrite it into a version that feels warmer, more genuine, and less like a follow-up script. Keep it under 70 words."

Engagement Prompts :

Topic 8 — Meaningful Comment

Type 1 — Quick

"Write a thoughtful LinkedIn comment for this post: [paste post]. My background: [one line about who you are]. Make it add genuine value, not just praise. Under 60 words."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write 3 different LinkedIn comments for the following post: [paste post]. My background and perspective: [who I am and what I know about this topic]
 Comment 1: Add a new perspective or insight. Comment 2: Share a relevant personal experience. Comment 3: Ask a specific, thoughtful question. Each comment should be between 40 and 80 words."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write 5 LinkedIn comments for the following post: [paste post]. My background: [your role and relevant expertise] My goal with this comment: [e.g. get noticed by the author / add value to the discussion / grow my profile visibility] Write 5 different styles:

1. A new perspective that respectfully adds to the post.
2. A personal experience that validates or complicates the post's point.
3. A follow-up question that invites the author to go deeper.
4. A contrarian view that starts a healthy debate.
5. A data point or example that strengthens the post's argument. Each between 50 and 90 words. No generic praise."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (Commenting to Get Noticed by a Recruiter or Founder)

"Write a LinkedIn comment designed to get me noticed by [a recruiter / a founder / a senior professional] who posted the following: [paste post]. My goal is to appear smart, relevant, and worth connecting with. My background: [who I am and what I do]. The comment should feel genuine and add real value — not performative. Under 80 words."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is a comment I left on a LinkedIn post: [paste comment]. It got very little engagement. Analyse what it is doing wrong and rewrite it into a version that is more likely to get a reply from the author or visibility in the comment section. Keep it under 80 words."

Content Creation Prompts :

Topic 9 — Post Idea Generation

Type 1 — Quick

"Give me 10 LinkedIn post ideas for someone in [your niche — e.g. tech career coaching]. Mix personal stories, educational content, and opinions. One line per idea."

Type 2 — Standard

"Generate 7 LinkedIn post ideas for me. My niche: [e.g. Career growth in tech] My audience: [e.g. Students and early-career engineers] My recent experiences or thoughts: [e.g. just helped someone crack Google, thinking about the role of networking in job searches] For each idea include: content type, suggested hook, and one line description of the body."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Generate a full LinkedIn content ideation list for me — 20 post ideas across all 6 content types. My niche: [e.g. LinkedIn growth and personal branding] My audience: [e.g. Working professionals who want to grow their LinkedIn] My personal experiences I can draw from: [list 3 to 5 things that happened to you recently] My opinions I hold strongly: [list 2 to 3 opinions you have about your industry] Distribute ideas across: personal stories, educational how-to, industry opinions, behind the scenes, career milestones, and polls. For each idea give: content type, hook, body summary, and suggested CTA."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (For Students During Placement Season)

"Generate 10 LinkedIn post ideas for a final year engineering student going through campus placements. The content should feel real and relatable to other students in the same situation. Mix of: lessons from interviews, preparation tips, honest reflections, small wins, and motivational content that does not feel forced. For each idea give a suggested hook line."

Sample Output: "Post idea: The one mistake I kept making in every technical interview before I figured out what was wrong. Hook: I failed the same round in 7 different companies before I understood why."

Type 5 — Refinement

"I posted these topics recently and they did not perform well: [list 3 to 5 post topics]. Analyse why they might have underperformed and suggest 10 new post ideas that cover similar themes but are more likely to get engagement. Explain what you changed for each."

Topic 10 — Full LinkedIn Post Writing
Type 1 — Quick

"Write a LinkedIn post about [your topic or idea] for [your audience]. Hook in the first two lines, value in the body, soft CTA at the end. Under 150 words. Tone: [conversational / professional / inspirational]."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write a LinkedIn post for me. Topic or rough idea: [describe your idea in a few sentences or bullet points] Target audience: [who this is for] Key message or lesson: [what you want them to take away] Tone: [e.g. honest, personal, no fluff] Length: 150 to 200 words. Structure: Strong hook, story or explanation in the body, takeaway, CTA."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write a complete LinkedIn post for me. Topic: [your full idea with any relevant details or bullet points] Audience: [detailed description of who is reading this] Hook style I want: [e.g. bold statement / surprising fact / relatable situation / question] Body structure: [e.g. personal story leading to a lesson / step-by-step breakdown / contrasting comparison] Key lesson or takeaway: [the one thing you want them to remember] Tone: [detailed tone description — e.g. like talking to a smart friend, not a corporate presentation] CTA: [what you want them to do — comment, follow, DM, share] Length: 200 to 250 words. Also write 3 alternative hook options I can choose from."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (Personal Milestone Post)

"Write a LinkedIn post about a personal milestone I recently achieved: [describe the milestone — e.g. got my first job, hit 10K followers, launched a product]. Make it feel genuine and humble, not braggy. Include the story of what it took to get here, one lesson learned, and a line of encouragement for others in a similar journey. Under 200 words."

Sample Output: "Six months ago I was refreshing my email every hour waiting for an offer letter.

Today I signed with [Company].

The honest version of this story is not inspiring in a clean way. I applied to 38 companies. I got 6 first rounds. 2 reached the final stage. 1 said yes.

The thing that changed between application 1 and application 38 was not luck — it was that I stopped applying to everything and started applying to the right things with a much sharper story about why I was the right person.

If you are in the middle of a job search right now and it feels like nothing is working — it is probably not your resume. It is your targeting.

Happy to share what changed for me if it helps. Drop a comment or DM."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is a LinkedIn post I wrote: [paste post]. It performed below my expectations. Analyse what is weak about it — the hook, the structure, the CTA, or the clarity — and rewrite it into a stronger version. Keep the same core message but make it significantly more engaging. Explain your changes."

Topic 11 — Hook Writing

Type 1 — Quick

"Write 10 hook options for a LinkedIn post about [your topic]. Each hook should be the first one to two lines of a post. Make them varied — some bold statements, some questions, some surprising facts."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write 10 LinkedIn post hooks for the following topic: [your topic]. My audience: [who will read this] My angle or main point: [what the post argues or teaches] Write hooks in 5 different styles: bold statement, counterintuitive claim, relatable situation, specific number or data, and personal confession. Two hooks per style."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write 15 LinkedIn post hooks for the following topic and angle: [describe topic and main argument in detail]. My audience: [detailed audience description] The emotion I want to trigger in the first two lines: [curiosity / discomfort / recognition / surprise / motivation] Hooks I already tried that did not work: [paste any previous hooks] Write hooks across these styles: bold claim, vulnerable confession, surprising statistic, contrarian take, relatable failure, future prediction, and specific scenario. At least 2 per style. Rate each hook on a scale of 1 to 10 for likely scroll-stopping power and explain why."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (Hooks for Educational Posts)

"Write 10 hooks specifically for educational LinkedIn posts in the [your niche] space. These posts teach something practical. The hooks should make people think — I did not know that — or — I need to read this. Each hook should be under 2 lines and create a clear knowledge gap that the post promises to fill."

Sample Output: "Most people prepare for system design interviews the wrong way. Here is the exact framework that changed everything for me."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here are 5 hooks I wrote. Rate each one on scroll-stopping potential and explain why. Then rewrite each one into a stronger version. Hook 1: [paste] Hook 2: [paste] Hook 3: [paste] Hook 4: [paste] Hook 5: [paste]"

"Create a 2-week LinkedIn content calendar for someone in [your niche]. Include post topic, content type, and suggested posting day for each. Keep it simple."

Type 2 — Standard

"Create a 30-day LinkedIn content calendar for me. My niche: [e.g. career coaching for tech professionals] My audience: [e.g. students and early career engineers] Posting frequency: [e.g. 5 times a week] Content mix I want: [e.g. 2 educational, 1 personal story, 1 opinion, 1 engagement post per week] Include: date, content type, topic, hook idea, and CTA for each post."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Create a full 30-day LinkedIn content calendar for me. My niche: [detailed description] My audience: [detailed description] My personal experiences I can draw from this month: [list recent events, lessons, or observations] Content types to include each week: personal story, educational, opinion, behind the scenes, poll, and one meme or motivational post. Upcoming dates relevant to my audience: [e.g. placement season, a product launch, a festival, an industry event] For each post include: day and date, content type, topic and angle, suggested hook, estimated reading time, and CTA."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (First Month on LinkedIn)

"Create a content calendar for someone posting on LinkedIn for the very first time. They are a [describe the person — e.g. final year engineering student]. They are just starting and want to build a presence, test different content types, and find what works. Create a 30-day plan with one post per day. Keep topics beginner-friendly — no need for deep expertise, just genuine personal experiences and learnings. Include a variety of formats across the month."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is my current content calendar for the month: [paste calendar]. Identify any gaps — missing content types, repetitive topics, lack of variety in hooks or formats — and suggest improvements. Then rewrite the calendar with the suggested changes integrated."

Newsletter Prompts :

Topic 13 — Newsletter Topic Ideas

Type 1 — Quick

"Give me 10 LinkedIn newsletter topic ideas for someone in [your niche]. Each idea should be specific enough to build an entire edition around. One line per idea."

Type 2 — Standard

"Generate 15 LinkedIn newsletter edition ideas for me. My niche: [e.g. career growth in tech] My audience: [e.g. students and early-career engineers] My newsletter publishing frequency: [e.g. bi-weekly] Mix the ideas across: educational deep-dives, personal stories, industry trends, practical guides, and opinion pieces. For each idea give a title and a one line description."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Generate a full 3-month content plan for my LinkedIn newsletter. Newsletter name: [your newsletter name] Niche: [detailed description] Audience: [detailed description] Publishing frequency: [weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly] Themes I want to cover in the next 3 months: [list any topics, trends, or experiences you want to explore] For each edition suggest: edition number, title, main topic, key sections to cover, and a hook for the opening paragraph."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (For a Brand New Newsletter)

"I am launching a LinkedIn newsletter for the first time. My niche is [your niche]. My audience is [your audience]. Help me plan the first 6 editions. For each edition suggest a title, a clear topic, why this topic is the right one for that stage of building an audience, and what the reader should walk away knowing or feeling after reading it."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is the topic idea for my next newsletter edition: [describe topic]. It feels broad and unfocused. Help me narrow it down into a specific, compelling angle that would make someone immediately want to read it. Suggest 5 sharper versions of the same topic with different angles and explain which one would perform best and why."

Topic 14 — Newsletter Edition Writing

Type 1 — Quick

"Write a short LinkedIn newsletter edition on [your topic] for [your audience]. Keep it under 400 words. Opening hook, main insight, key takeaway, and CTA."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write a LinkedIn newsletter edition for me. Topic: [your topic] Audience: [who is reading] Main insight or lesson: [the core thing you want to communicate] Personal story or example to include: [any real experience that relates] Length: 500 to 700 words. Structure: Opening hook, context, main content in 2 to 3 sections, key takeaway, CTA."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write a full LinkedIn newsletter edition for me. Newsletter name: [your newsletter name] Edition number and title: [e.g. Edition 12 — The One Mistake That Kills Most LinkedIn Profiles] Topic: [detailed description of what this edition covers] Main argument or thesis: [what you want the reader to believe or do differently after reading] Personal story or case study to include: [real experience] Data points or examples to reference: [any stats, studies, or examples you know of] Tone: [e.g. direct, honest, like a smart friend giving advice] Sections to include: opening hook, background or context, main insight broken into 2 to 3 parts, common mistakes related to the topic, action steps, closing thought, CTA. Length: 800 to 1000 words."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (Opinion Edition)

"Write a LinkedIn newsletter edition that takes a strong opinion on a controversial or debated topic in [your industry]. The opinion should be: [describe your take]. Build the argument with evidence, examples, and personal experience. Acknowledge the counterargument briefly and address it. Make the reader feel like they are reading something they have never quite seen stated this clearly before. Length: 600 to 800 words."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is a draft of my LinkedIn newsletter edition: [paste draft]. It feels too long, too dry, or too generic. Identify the three biggest problems with it and rewrite it into a tighter, more engaging version. Keep the core message but make every paragraph earn its place. Target length: [your preferred word count]."

Brand Deal Prompts :

Topic 15 — Cold Brand Pitch

Type 1 — Quick

"Write a short cold email to pitch a brand collaboration on LinkedIn. Brand: [brand name and what they do]. My profile: [follower count, niche, audience type]. Keep it under 150 words. Professional but not stiff."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write a cold pitch email for a LinkedIn brand collaboration. Brand I am pitching: [brand name, what they sell, why they are relevant to my audience] My profile stats: [followers, average impressions, engagement rate] My audience: [who follows me — profession, industry, demographics] What I am proposing: [e.g. 2 sponsored posts over 4 weeks] My value to them: [why my audience would respond well to their product] Length: under 200 words. Subject line included."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write a complete brand collaboration pitch email for me. Brand: [detailed description — name, product, target customer, recent campaigns if known] Why this brand fits my audience: [specific reasoning] My profile stats: [followers, average impressions, engagement rate, audience breakdown] Past collaborations if any: [brand names and brief outcome] Proposed collaboration: [exactly what I am offering — number of posts, format, timeline, platform] My pricing: [optional — include or leave for conversation] What outcome I can deliver for them: [leads, awareness, traffic, signups] Tone: [professional but personable — not a cold sales email, more like a business proposal from someone who has done their research] Length: 250 to 300 words. Include subject line and a clear CTA."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (Pitching Around a Seasonal Campaign)

"Write a LinkedIn brand collaboration pitch email timed around [specific occasion — e.g. Black Friday / New Year / Independence Day]. Brand: [brand name and product]. My pitch should communicate that I am reaching out ahead of their campaign planning window, that my audience is relevant to their product, and that I have a specific idea for what the collaboration could look like. Keep it under 200 words. Urgent but not pushy."

Sample Output: "Subject: LinkedIn Collaboration for Black Friday — [Your Name]

Hi [Name],

With Black Friday six weeks away, I wanted to reach out before your campaign budget is finalised.

I run a LinkedIn page focused on [niche] with [X] followers and an average of [X] impressions per post. My audience is primarily [audience type] — exactly the people likely to act on [brand's product].

I have a specific content idea in mind that I think would perform well for your brand without feeling like a promotion to my audience. Happy to share the full concept on a quick call.

Would you be open to a 15-minute conversation this week?

[Your name]"

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is a brand pitch email I sent that got no response: [paste email]. Tell me what is wrong with it and rewrite it into a version that is more compelling, specific, and likely to get a reply. Explain the key changes."

Topic 16 — Negotiation Response

Type 1 — Quick

"Write a professional reply to a brand that offered [their offer, e.g. Rs 3000] when my rate is [your rate, e.g. Rs 8000]. Politely counter and hold firm on my value. Under 100 words."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write a negotiation response email to a brand collaboration offer. What they offered: [amount or terms] My rate: [your standard rate] My justification for the rate: [impressions, engagement, audience quality, past results] What I am willing to offer instead if they cannot meet my rate: [e.g. smaller deliverable for lower price] Tone: Professional, confident, not apologetic. Under 150 words."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write a full negotiation email responding to a lowball brand collaboration offer. Brand: [brand name] Their offer: [exact amount and terms they proposed] My standard rate: [your rate and what it includes] Data I have to justify my rate: [impressions, engagement rate, audience demographics, past collaboration results] What I am willing to compromise on if needed: [e.g. one post instead of two, shorter timeline, smaller scope] What I am not willing to compromise on: [minimum rate, content rights, payment timeline] Tone: Firm but professional. Make clear this is a counter-proposal, not begging. Include a specific next step — a call, a revised proposal, or a deadline for their response. Length: under 200 words."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (Walking Away Professionally)

"Write a polite but firm email declining a brand collaboration because the offer is too far below my rate and there is no room for negotiation. Brand: [brand name]. Their final offer: [amount]. I want to decline in a way that keeps the relationship warm for the future, makes clear why I am declining, and leaves the door open if their budget changes. Under 100 words."

Sample Output: "Hi [Name],

Thank you for the updated offer — I genuinely appreciate the back and forth.

After careful consideration, I am not able to make it work at this rate without compromising the quality and authenticity of the content, which would not serve either of us well.

I hope we can revisit this when your campaign budget allows for a fuller collaboration. I remain a genuine admirer of what [Brand] is building and would love to work together in a future cycle.

Wishing you all the best with the campaign."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is my negotiation email: [paste email]. It comes across as [too desperate / too aggressive / too vague]. Rewrite it to be firm, professional, and confident without being difficult to work with. Keep the same key points."

Topic 17 — Media Kit Description

Type 1 — Quick

"Write a short professional bio paragraph for my LinkedIn media kit. I am a [your role] with [follower count] followers. My niche is [topic]. My audience is [description]. 3 to 4 sentences maximum."

Type 2 — Standard

"Write the bio and value proposition section for my LinkedIn media kit. My name: [optional] My role and background: [e.g. Software engineer turned LinkedIn creator] Follower count: [number] Average impressions: [number] Niche: [your content topic] Audience type: [description] What I offer brands: [type of content and value] Tone: Professional but personable. Under 150 words."

Type 3 — Detailed

"Write all the text sections for my LinkedIn media kit. Section 1 — Creator Bio: Who I am, my background, my content niche, and my credibility. 100 words max. Section 2 — Audience Profile: Description of my audience — profession, demographics, interests, and why they are valuable to brands. 80 words max. Section 3 — What I Offer: Types of collaborations I do — sponsored posts, carousels, newsletter features, webinars. Describe each in one to two sentences. Section 4 — Why Partner With Me: My unique value as a creator — engagement quality, audience trust, content authenticity. 80 words max. My details: Follower count: [X]. Average impressions: [X]. Engagement rate: [X%]. Audience breakdown: [demographics]. Past collaborations: [brand names]. Content niche: [topic]. Tone: Professional, confident, data-backed. Like a business document that still feels human."

Type 4 — Situation Specific (For a Creator With No Past Brand Deals)

"Write the bio and value proposition sections for a LinkedIn media kit for someone who has never done a brand collaboration before. They have [follower count] followers and [average impressions]. Their niche is [topic]. Help them present themselves professionally and credibly despite having no past brand references. Focus on audience quality, content consistency, and organic reach as the value proposition."

Type 5 — Refinement

"Here is my current media kit bio: [paste bio]. It reads as [too informal / too corporate / too generic]. Rewrite it into a version that sounds professional, confident, and data-backed. Keep the same facts but make it feel like it belongs in a premium media kit. Under 150 words."
